AI evaluation gigs: current routes and complete effective-pay records

Researched 2026-11-07.

Strengths and best use

AI evaluation platforms let people apply domain knowledge to response ranking, rubrics, data review, and specialized tasks. The useful opportunity is matching demonstrable expertise to an actual project. This reel identifies CrowdGen, Mindrift, micro1, and Toloka as discovery leads. CrowdGen (https://crowdgen.com/) - Mindrift (https://mindrift.ai/) - micro1 (https://www.micro1.ai/experts)

Independent checks

Toloka's contributor route now redirects to Mindrift, whose official welcome page says tasks, accounts, and balances have moved there. Treat those two names as a related route when comparing opportunities. micro1 explicitly describes an AI interview. Rates and task access depend on the specific role, location, qualifications, and accepted work. The reel's $3,500 weekly figure needs hours, task availability, and actual settled payments to evaluate. Migration information (https://mindrift.ai/welcome)

Compare an application carefully

Open a role through the official site and record its URL, eligibility, screening process, stated rate, task availability, payment conditions, and date checked. Estimate assessment, training, waiting, and rework time alongside paid task time. Preserve uncertainty when details are absent. Follow the task's instructions about tools and AI assistance.

Use a sample evaluation to demonstrate reasoning. Explain a ranking, identify factual errors, and build a rubric with observable criteria. Review the complete instructions before starting any qualification exercise.

Reusable prompt

Compare these current official opportunities against my actual skills. Extract eligibility, assessments, rate basis, accepted-work rules, and payment conditions. Preserve unknown values. Estimate effective pay using all supplied time records and suggest a small practice rubric relevant to the role.
```

Project idea

Create an opportunity comparison and earnings ledger with separate application, qualification, working, review, and payment states. Use fictional records in any public sample.
